Mayor Dawn Zimmer filed a proposed rule change before the New Jersey Municipal Authorities Act Council Wednesday that would require municipal taxpayers to pay for most public access to the courts. "While other cities may have a free website that taxpayers can use to follow proceedings in their government, our citizens are currently required to pay to access their own government's website, and that's a problem," Zimmer said at a City Hall news conference. "That's why I'm proposing to change that." But the approach is being met with mixed reactions, according to Steven Goldstein, the city's chief administrative officer and a mayoral appointee to the council. Goldstein said it wasn't a decision made lightly, as the proposal still needs to be reviewed and approved by the council and approved by state regulators. "It is an experiment," he said. "It's not that we didn't think about it, it's just that this is a big project." The rule change is necessary because the city's website, which has been online since at least 2007 and serves as the gateway to other municipal functions, has been down several times since the mayor's office was hired to run it. While the current version of the website was developed in-house by the municipal government, it's not directly supported by taxpayer funds. The mayor said the city has paid about $240,000 this year for legal work performed by the municipal attorney's office, and each case costs about $15,
