[2] The supreme court has stated that a summary judgment is proper when, as here, (1) the defendant negates at least one element of each of the plaintiff's theories of recovery, or (2) the plaintiff fails to allege or prove an essential element of each of his theories of recovery. See Little v. Texas Dep't of Criminal Justice, 148 S.W.3d 374, 382-83 (Tex.2004). The two formulations are simply different ways of asking the same question. Id.
