The estrogen-like effect of natural estrogens and synthetic estrogen-mimicking compounds on apoA-I and apoA-IV activity in human skin fibroblasts. To investigate the influence of estrogens on apolipoprotein (apo) A-I and apoA-IV in human skin fibroblasts, the peptides encoded by the genes of these apolipoproteins (apoA-I and apoA-IV), as well as their mRNAs, were analyzed in cells that were cultured in the presence or absence of 17 beta-estradiol. Cells were shown to contain significant amounts of both apoA-I and apoA-IV mRNA, and these levels were differentially regulated by estrogens. The 2- to 3-fold increase in apoA-I and apoA-IV mRNA levels in human skin fibroblasts obtained after 1-2 d of culture in 10% serum was shown to occur within 1 to 2 h in response to 10⁻⁹ M 17 beta-estradiol. All four of the natural steroids examined (estrone, equilin, estriol, and 17 alpha-ethinyl estradiol) also increased mRNA levels of apoA-I and apoA-IV. In contrast, no significant increase in apoA-I and apoA-IV mRNA was found in human skin fibroblasts treated with 10⁻⁹ M diethylstilbestrol (DES), 3 beta-estradiol (3 beta-E), or tamoxifen. In all studies conducted, apoA-I and apoA-IV peptide levels remained constant. When added to the incubation mixture, 17 beta-estradiol, 17 alpha-ethinyl estradiol, and DES, but not 3 beta-E, increased apoA-I and apoA-IV peptide levels. Although the abundance of apoA-I and apoA-IV peptide and mRNA were not significantly altered by the nonestrogenic estrogen-mimicking compounds, addition of 17 beta-estradiol or diethylstilbestrol to human skin fibroblast cultures for 5 d inhibited the steady-state levels of apoA-I and apoA-IV peptide and mRNA that were noted in cells incubated in the absence of the compounds. These results demonstrate that some estrogen-like compounds

Wednesday, September 23, 2013 March is always my favorite month, as I have the opportunity to visit a few different wonderful places. We spent Labor Day weekend in the foothills, located about an hour west of Sacramento, in Twin Oaks. The picturesque town reminds me of the movie The Summer of '42, which was filmed here. We arrived after the mid-day heat had subsided and wandered through town on our own. There was even a little "double rainbow" (right side of the picture) that we couldn't resist taking a picture of. These little trinkets are sold at different shops along Main Street and some of them are beautifully crafted. And the flowers! The flowers are amazing! On a side note, I'm curious if Twin Oaks was the inspiration for the small town in the TV series, 13 Reasons Why? If you know the answer, let me know! :) We were pleasantly surprised by the warm, hospitable town and felt right at home. We were able to attend a high school graduation at "The Commons" - a gorgeous venue located on the town square and overlooking the town. Loved every minute of it! And this year, we celebrated my dad's 80th birthday at Twin Oaks. He's one of the elders in the area and has a strong fondness for the community. He even was a big supporter of the last round of renovations that were done to the town's downtown. Very cool! I feel so blessed to call this place my home, and even more blessed to have my family there with me! Thanks for stopping by. I would love to hear from you in the comments section! 12 comments: Wow. This place sounds so lovely. Do you ever get to come back for a real vacation there? It sounds like you have a lovely family and so well loved and still in your life. Happy Labor Day everyone. I wish I had a vacation to look forward to - it's been a rough month and a half. But i'll be ready for something other than work when fall hits. Lovely pictures. Thanks for sharing.
