Q: How to find out if a PInvoke DLL was built with msil We have multiple C# projects that make use of classes that have PInvoke DLLs for the native DLLs. These PInvoke DLLs are built using the.net Micro Framework. So, one project has a PInvoke DLL for the NMEA 0183 interface and the other projects make use of classes from that DLL. The problem is, that every time we make a change to the source code of a DLL, the whole project (DLL) has to be compiled again and since not all of the projects use the same DLLs, compilation times vary a lot. So, I need to know if it is possible to determine whether a PInvoke DLL is built using IL or the.NET Micro Framework. Is there a way to find out how the PInvoke class was made or what resources are used to make the DLL? A: You can't determine what.NET framework you're targetting at build time. It's the responsibility of the project to determine it at runtime. Either way, the assembly is going to have the same.NET dependencies. If you want to avoid recompiling, I'm afraid the solution is as simple as putting everything into a single project. [Potentiating effect of serum factor on sensitized lymphocyte blastogenesis]. Sensitized rat lymphocytes were treated with various concentrations of serum factors (Factor Y, YC, Y2, Y3, Factor I, Factor II and Factor III) for 18 hours. The cell survival, as indicated by their ability to form colonies in soft agarose gel, was well maintained and increased with the passage of the treatment time. The responsiveness of the sensitized lymphocytes to Con A was augmented after the treatment with serum factor, but the peak of the blastogenic response was markedly decreased after the treatment with those serum factor. With the use of serum factor-treated and untreated (control) lymphocytes, the pattern of the proliferative response to mitogen was similar, but the maximum value of the lymphocyte survival was somewhat lower in the serum factor-treated group. When the potency of various rat serum factors was evaluated on the cell survival and proliferative response to Con A, the potency order was similar to that determined by the antibody-precipitation methods. These results suggest that some unidentified serum factors might
