Choosing among Photoshop alternatives You don't always have to purchase Photoshop to be able to edit photos. In the following sections, we cover the basics of what makes a good photo-editing program, and we discuss the pros and cons of some of the most popular alternatives. If you have a digital camera and don't want to purchase Photoshop, you have some alternatives to consider. It is possible to download a free image-editing program — in fact, every new digital camera comes with one or two — from your camera manufacturer. Like Photoshop, these programs are loaded with features that enable you to transform your images with ease. * In Windows, you have two choices of programs that enable you to work in the latest image-editing features: Adobe Photoshop Elements and GIMP. Although neither program is free, it is possible to use the limited features of Elements for free by using the trial version of Adobe Photoshop. More features are available in the paid-for versions of Elements. * Apple users have a variety of choices. The program that is included with your iMac is Aperture (you can get a copy for $149 at www.apple.com). A version for Windows users, Elements, is a free upgrade. Photos is a Photoshop clone program that you can download from www.MacSoft.com. Photoshop is by far the most popular choice of photo editors. Although there are other programs available, almost every photo editor is powered by the use of the underlying layer system of Photoshop. ## Preparing Images for Editing Before you begin editing, you have to prepare the images

Kampala, Uganda (CNN) Uganda's President Yoweri Museveni has signed into law the Anti-Homosexuality Bill, despite strong opposition from politicians, religious leaders and several of his own party members. The bill was approved by parliament last week and now goes into effect 30 days after it was published in the official newspaper. Under the law, LGBT people will face up to life in prison and two years in prison for consensual sex. LGBT Ugandans will also face life in prison for being transgender. It states: "Whoever is proved to have engaged in a sexual act with another person of the same sex shall be punished with life imprisonment." Ugandans will also face up to a year in jail for "public behavior promoting a homosexual lifestyle." Homosexuality is already illegal in Uganda. The law was pushed through by Museveni. It stated that "any homosexual practice is a crime against humanity and against the values of the society." Although parliament supported it, all 85 MP's that voted on the bill didn't support the anti-LGBT law. Several MPs said they voted against the bill because they were promised certain things for supporting it, including re-election to parliament. Some MPs said they'd be imprisoned for supporting the bill, and have faced death threats and been physically attacked for doing so. The opposition claimed there were "dozens of promises" made by Museveni and his government in exchange for the bill's approval. Although the bill was supported by most of the ruling party, several MPs voted against it. The High Court is currently investigating whether the law will be enforced, but Museveni is known to be confident that it will be, no matter the outcome of the court's inquiry. Uganda's law to ban 'homosexuality' launched today. It is being called the strictest anti-gay law in the world. The president says 'it's not my aim to persecute homosexuals but to protect the institution of marriage. #FreePeoplesVote#Right2Decide pic.twitter.com/KafyGdObje — Nick Power (@npower) January 14, 2018 'It's a disaster for my country' Hopes of overturning the law were slim, but the high court is expected to deliver its verdict early next year. Museveni has said that implementing the

The Israeli movement to boycott academic institutions in Israel and support the Palestinian population in the Al Aqsa Mosque was held in the occupied territory with the presence of the students of University of Tel-Aviv, and other universities around the world. This movement was held at the World Remembrance Day to Victims of Nazism, organized by the Tel-Aviv University BDS center, and were represented by students and youths of the organization. The movement was held on the heart of the Israeli occupied West Bank, where Palestinian and the international solidarity activists attended the event. Students were singing, holding t-shirts and flyers in support of the Boycott Divestment Sanctions movement against Israel in the occupied territory. The demonstrators were chanting the slogan of the boycott that is written in many languages including Hebrew, English, Arabic and Hebrew. The demonstration was staged in a very festive atmosphere, and there were many slogans such as "BDS lives", "BDS education", "BDS arts", "BDS culture", "BDS boycott" and "Say no to apartheid" slogans. Also the participants marched through the streets of the city holding Palestinian flags and Israeli flags. In the symbolic ending of the march, students of University of Tel-Aviv and other students around the world held long banners and chanted slogans supporting the boycott of the occupation. Students in the banner read as part of the movement's slogan "We will boycott Israeli institutions until the Palestinian cause is recognized". The Israeli imposed economic and academic boycott on Palestinians will only remain a "nationalistic dream" and it will never be achieved, Palestinian youths said. The BDS movement was launched in 2005 by Palestinians in order to support the Palestinians' struggle for freedom. It is the largest and most important movement. Today, the BDS have been endorsed by tens of civil society organizations, trade unions, academic institutions, cultural institutions and student groups around the world. According to a report compiled by BDS from July 2014, the number of Israeli companies that have signed a formal commitment to respect the boycott and refrain from doing business with Israeli businesses. It is estimated that more than 230 Israeli companies have committed to boycott Israeli products and investments. The report said that the number of companies showing support for the Boycott grew by 16 to reach the number of 277 during the first half of 2014
