Updated April 6, 2020 The average number of clinical visits in the first 3 months after diagnosis for women who have lower extremity cellulitis is two to three; for men, it is one to three. Because lower extremity cellulitis is associated with significant morbidity and occasional mortality, early recognition and treatment are desirable, although this is most difficult when cellulitis is not clinically apparent. According to the Infectious Diseases Society of America (IDSA), the bacterium which causes cellulitis, is usually Staphylococcus aureus (S. aureus). Other factors that influence the choice of agent include the location of the infection. In the groin, for example, S. aureus is more common. Cellulitis occurring along the vein-piped pathway is most commonly caused by S. aureus. The duration of time to appropriate treatment varies. At the University of Florida, an average of 9 days is required before treatment is initiated.

The average duration of treatment in other studies has been 7-11 days. The IDSA notes that, “Rapid (2-3 days) treatment of cellulitis is acceptable.” Cellulitis is a form of infection in which inflammation of tissue results from the local accumulation of fluid. Cellulitis is usually associated with a staphylococcal infection. Along with other differentials, cellulitis should be suspected
